Reagan to Undergo Surgery "For the first time, the president For Benign Growth in Colon

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan will undergo surgery Friday to have a benign growth removed from his large intestine, the White House said Wednesday. Doctors will also conduct additional tests for the possible presence of other growths.

Removal of the growth, which was discovered in a routine examina-tion in March, will be performed at the Bethesda Naval Hospital in Bethesda, Maryland. The president is expected to remain in the hospital overnight, said Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman. He will then go to the presidential retreat at Camp David, Maryland,

Mr. Speakes said the surgery was being done at the president's convenience and not because of any worrisome new symptoms.

In addition to the removal of the growth Mr. Reagan, who is 74, will undergo a colonoscopy, in which an instrument is used to visually examine the entire length of the colon. If other growths are found, they will probably be removed as well, Mr. Speakes said.

The procedures will entail the use of a painkiller and a sedative, but the president will not receive general anesthesia, he said. He said that the president would "be able to discharge his duties" while he was at the hospital and that no temporary transfer of power to Vice President George Bush was anticipated.

It seems unlikely that percep tions will change. Although offi-cials are invariably courteous now, there is no sign of a decline in the adulation of President Kim, in the regimentation of daily life for the zens, or in the secrecy. Nor can a visitor leave without a sense that the mainspring is fear.

As North Korean officials tell it, the long hours each week that all citizens spend studying the atterances of Kim II Sung and the sub-ordination of the individual to the group at nearly every turn are the product of an overwhelming popular enthusiasm for the leader. The enthusiasm comes, they say, from the "good things," in housing, edu-cation and medical care.

A Million Americans Tune In TV With Satellite Dish By Peter W. Kaplan

NEW YORK - In 1979 Neiman-Marcus, the huxury department store in Dallas, offered a $36,500 satelite dish antenna that, it promised, could provide a componia of television programming. Not one of them was sold, but the satellite dish had entered the market. In the last six years more than a million Americans have bought satellite dish antennas, now starting at $2,500, and pointed them toward space. The dishes can intercept a volume of programming far exceeding that of even the most complete cable television system, catching signals from as many as 150 broadcasters. Some of these signals are not intended for the viewing public, such as a sports event not being broadcast in the area where it is taking place, business meetings or, in one instance, an unsanctioned view of the president in the White House. The principle on which the dishes work is relatively simple: An installed dish is calibrated to point exactly in the direction of various satellites that hover at an altitude of around 22,300 miles (36,000 kilometers). Called geostationary, or geosynchronous, satellite they travel through space at the same speed at which the Earth rotates. Hence, dish antennas can pick up signals by training on a fixed point in the sky. The growth of the industry is accelerating, with 40,000 to 50,000 dishes are being sold each month. Some industry analysts expect that as many as five million may be in operation by the end of the decade.

variety of commercial, legal and environmental complications.

Among the issues are the following:

 Broadcasters, particularly cable companies, whose revenues are drawn exclusively from monthly service charges, call the use of the dishes piracy and are retaliating by scrambling their signals to prevent unauthorized interception.

 Owners of copyright programming, such as the National Football League, have gone to court to limit the extent to which signals picked up by dish antennas can be used

· Several hundred municipalities, faced with complaints over the aesthetics of the dishes, have passed dinances curbing their installation.

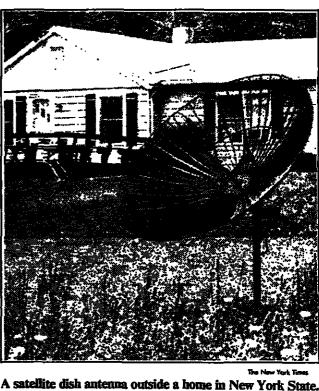

In the first area of problems, the New York Racing Authority is scrambling all its satellite broadcasts, and the broadcast networks are working on their own scrambling plans. A leading cable television service, Home Box Office, said it had invested $11 million to develop a scrambling system designed to prevent dish owners from intercepting programming without paying for it. The company says it is already scrambling several hours of programming a day. But since it wants to build an andience among the increasing number of dish owners, it has commissioned the building of a "descrambling" device that would be sold to consumers for $395.

The owners of satellite dishes, led by the Society for Private and Commercial Earth Stations, a lobbying TRIPOLI, Lebanon - Israeli planes and helicopter gunships rocketed three Palestinian guerrilla bases near Tripoli on Wednesday, a day after two suicide car-bomb attacks took 15 lives in Israel's securi-ty zone in south Lebanon.

WORLD BRIEFS

Soviet Denies Space Arms Concession GENEVA (NYT) — Soviet negotiators said Wednesday that reports indicating willingness by Moscow to accept an arms treaty allowing research on space defense were "incorrect." A statement, issued by Valeri Artemyev, an adviser to the Soviet team at arms talks in Geneva, referred to newspaper reports suggesting that Moscow had softened its intransigence toward research on the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, designed to provide a space shield against

He said that a report in The New York Times and "articles and reports of a similar content which appeared in other newspapers, do not reflect the actual state of affairs at the negotiations." Asked to explain further, Mr. Artemyev invoked a confidentiality agreement between the two sides and said: "It means, the thing I referred to is incorrect."

Administration officials were quoted Monday as saying that members of the Soviet delegation had approached U.S. negotiators informally two weeks ago to say that Moscow would no longer seek to ban research, but could deliniate between allowing laboratory and scientific research and banning development and testing.

NAIROBI (AP) - A meeting prefacing the official end of the United Nations Decade for Women opened Wednesday, with 11,000 women from 150 countries present and an official of the host country urging females to overcome barriers that stand in the way of full equality. Kenneth Matiba, Kenya's minister of culture and social services, opened the meeting with an expression of male identity with the women's struggle, saying, "We, the women of the world, shall overcome."

Organizers said the meeting, called Forum '85, was held to assess the progress during the UN's Decade for Women and to determine what still needed to be done. It will overlap a 12-day UN World Conference on Women, which opens Monday in Nairobi.

Turner has received a few letters in this regard, but representatives of the company say that its main purpose is to establish a legal claim to its signals. A cable company in Denver said

But Chuck Hewitt, the vice president of the owners' lobbying group, said that starting in 1983 about 30 percent of all sales had been made to urban and suburban homeown-

The second area of complications involves legal issues. To give dish owners legal back-

The National Football League became distressed about what it called the raiding of television images by satellite users when several Miami bar owners charged admission for blacked-out telecasts of the local Dolphins. The league has hired a Washington law firm and received a permanent injunction against that use.

Dishes have a reach that goes beyond broadcasting. When the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., for one, transmits a video business conference from one city to another, it has to scramble the signal to make it secure.

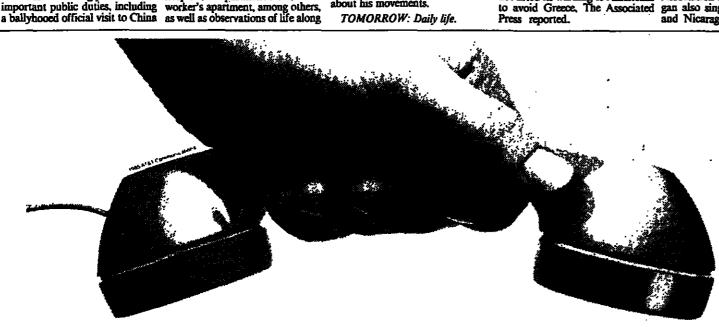

"The kind of information that is confidential," said Peter de Theyos, an AT&T marketing manager, "is encrypted and then decoded at the far end so that the video equivalent of computer hackers' can't get it.'

Generally, however, dish owners are neither corporate spies nor voycurs; they have just found out how to see more.

The third major problem brought about by the proliferation of dishes is on the environmental front. Antennas on local rooftops and in backyards have given rise to an onslaught of zoning regulations for aesthetic reasons.

In response, dish owners have organized and successfully lobbied both for federal legislation they want and for proposed rules from the Federal Communications Com-mission that would "pre-emptzoning ordinances by showing that they discriminate against dish owners' right to receive.

The agreement would end a difficult period in relations that began when the White House rushed the accord to completion so President Ronald Reagan would have something to announce on a visit to Beijing in 1984.

The accord was initialed during the visit and would ordinarily have been routinely sent to Congress for approval. But when U.S. officials began studying it, they said that China, according to intelligence information, might be in violation by helping Pakistan develop nuclear Embarrassed by the development, the administration sought clarification from Beijing, but the Chinese balked at reopening talks.

Earlier this year, China showed new interest, and an unpublicized trip was made to China in June by Richard T. Kennedy, special adviser to Secretary of State George P. Shuitz on curbing a spread of nuclear weapons.

desire to move ahead with the project. It has similar pacts with Japan and West European countries, but any contracts are unlikely until the U.S. accord is concluded because the United States controls much nuclear technology.

Kenneth L. Adelman, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, will have to certify that the Chinese accord does not conflict with the international 1968 treaty banning the spread of nuclear weapons, which entered into force for the United States in 1970.

The Chinese have refused to accode to that treaty because, they say, it is an effort by the United States and the Soviet Union to dominate others.

U.S. officials said the main achievement of the civilian nuclear power accord being negotiated was that China would, in effect, accept constraints on weapons spread without having signed the 1968

How to Prolong the Oil Glut

With petroleum prices tumbling, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is reduced to a quarreling club of cousins, each trying to avoid the lunch check. But the temptation to gloat should be resisted. Oil gluts have happened before. The price of prolonging the present one is careful planning.

OPEC's current woes, while difficult to predict five years ago, are easily explained. Though the oil exporters claim to be a cartel that can set prices and enforce them by controlling production, they have never achieved the necessary discipline. Most have always exported as much oil as possible. Only Saudi Arabia has significantly affected the price because it alone has enough production capacity and surplus wealth to adjust its output.

It was easy for Saudi Arabia to manage the cartel at the pre-1979 price of about $15 a barrel. But at $25 to $35 the demand fell far below potential supply, and even Saudi re-straint could not hold the price. After peaking at 14 million barrels a day during the Iranian revolution, Saudi production steadily declined to a current level of a mere 2 million barrels. And an annual Saudi trade surplus of $70 billion has plummeted to an unsustainable deficit of $20 billion. Any further reduction in oil production would thus have to come at the expense of other exporters, whose discord guarantees more years of sluggish oil prices.

So why not yield to the temptation to sit back and enjoy OPEC's travail? Because as prices fall to the predicted $20 a barrel, the supply-and-demand gap will narrow and, probably within a decade, the Saudis will be back in the driver's seal

One good way to postpone that day of reckoning would be to speed up America's stockpiling of oil in a strategic reserve. No conceivable amount of stockpiling could match the Saudi reserves or replace Saudi production for very long. But a much larger reserve could effectively blunt any threat of political blackmail. An even better response would combine conservation in the United States with a long-term effort to encourage investment in new sources of oil worldwide.

Shortsightedly, none of these measures are being seriously planned. Purchases for the oil reserve are being cut back to save money. Washington yawns at the notion of subsidizing the development of oil resources in Latin America and Africa. And even though the inflation-adjusted price of oil is now 40 percent lower than it was in 1981, conservation taxes are dismissed as politically unacceptable.

When the Saudis can again afford to reduce their production and resume paying for OPEC lunches, do not blame some mean cartel. Remember this moment and blame ourselves. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Zimbabwe Is Still Special

Zimbabwe's ethnic majority, the Shonaspeaking tribes, have now given a strong vote of confidence in a free election to Prime Minister Robert Mugabe. Meanwhile the country's minorities, the Ndebele-speakers and the whites, have celebrated their constitutional rights by electing representatives Mr. Mugabe finds distasteful. Such freedom is rare in Africa, and is one of Zimbabwe's special strengths. Yet Mr. Mugabe, who began his term as an apostle of reconciliation, now vents frustration at any support for his opponents and speaks of soon turning Zimbabwe into a one-party state. Mobs of his supporters are again attacking Ndebele-speaking opponents. A once prag-matic politician seems to have lost sight of pluralism's practical advantages. The course he preaches has brought weakness and turmoil to many neighboring states.

Nation-building in Africa has been encumbered by arbitrary boundaries drawn in colonial times, mixing often antagonistic tribal groups into a single polity. This virtually guaranteed the post-independence struggles for political and economic domination. Zimbabwe's struggles have so far been mediated through the ballot box. As power flowed from the whites toward the Shona, mostly bypassing the Ndebele, there has been bitterness and occasional violence and repression. But violence has been contained and the economy has been spared significant disruption. This may not have been the case if minority groups had been shut out.

The British-brokered constitutional compromise that ended a low-level guerrilla war has now run half its 10-year term. The Mugabe government still demonstrably lacks the full confidence of minority voters. Yet Mr. Mugabe strongly hints he may scrap the constitu-tion years ahead of schedule. The Western world can say what it wants," he declares.

Undoubtedly. But what of his fellow citizens? —THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Well Done, David Stockman

David Stockman's career as President Ronald Reagan's budget director was most notable not for the clear-cutting he tried to do in the federal forest, but for a kind of intellectual and moral integrity that is rarely found in national public life, and that any administration would be lucky to have. There is irony here, because Mr. Stockman's most famous moments were those he spent in or uncomfortably near the president's woodshed, when it turned out he had said very different things about policy in Both inside and outside the administration, for opposite reasons, he lost some credibility in these affairs. But in the end he gained Mr. Stockman has been one of the important truthtellers in this administration. It is a tribute to Mr. Reagan, to whom a considerable part of that sometimes unpleasant truth was told, that he kept Mr. Stockman on.

There has always been a tension within the administration between two economic camps, the more ideological and the more conventional, the supply-siders and the budget-balancers. Mr. Stockman, a lover of theory, sounded at first as if he might be one of the former. But the budget job has its own imperatives. Mr. Stockman became a voice of relative moderation within the administration on both the defense buildup and taxes. As the deficit soared he pressed for less of the one and more of the other. He mostly lost these arguments, and in that bottom-line sense his tenure has been, if not disastrous, then surely paradoxical. His years of celebrated budget-cutting were years when the government seemed truly to lose control of the budget. But Mr. Stockman was budget director, not president.

On domestic programs, Mr. Stockman said in his first year in office that the administraof benefit to business and the middle class no less than those benefiting the poor. But it was not evenhanded: The poor were hurt most. In this most recent budget, however, Mr.

Stockman came to where he said he would be. His goal has been where possible to extract the government not just from social equations but also from the economy. The current budget would do that - at the considerable risk of offending some of the building blocks of any future Republican majority: farmers, military retirees, the great mass of middle-class parents with children in or near college. We have often taken issue with Mr. Stockman. But we have deep respect for the manner in which he has served the president. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Welcome Step by Vietnam

Vietnam's sudden decision to return the remains of 26 U.S. servicemen missing in action is at once a hopeful diplomatic sign and perverse proof that Hanoi has been toying with American emotions for a long, long time. Each time in the past that Vietnam has released the remains of much smaller numbers of MIAs, it has insisted unconvincingly that it knew of no others. Now the pretense is gone. Vietnam last week announced that in the next two years it wants to clear up questions concerning more than 2,400 servicemen the Unit-ed States still lists as missing.

Welcome as this step may be, it does not address the emigration of up to 10,000 Vietnamese who allied themselves with the United States during the war and were subsequently sent to "re-education" camps by victorious Communist forces. Nor does it deal with many thousands of Amerasian children America is prepared to admit, along with their mothers.

It was announced that he had reached an altitude of 6,175 feet. The aviator remained in the air an hour and two minutes, making circles more than two miles in diameter, going higher and higher and arousing the usiasm of many thousands of persons on the Boardwalk. Mr. Brookins made the descent in seven minutes. His gasoline gave out and the motor stopped when he was 5,600 feet high, with the ocean directly under him. His descent was then made in a series of circular glides, finishing with sharp swerving, which the spectators took for a final act of daring, but which really was the only move that could have saved the aviator from dashing into the ocean.

Why SDI Will Help to Create a Safer World

WASHINGTON — In a few weeks the world will pause to remember the birth of the Atomic Age. Many will wonder whether the fearful shadow cast by nuclear weap-ons can ever be lifted.

There is cause for hope. Two years igo President Ronald Reagan offered a bold new vision for peace. We call it the Strategic Defense Initiative. The SDI is aimed at exploring innovative ideas for effective, non-nuclear defenses against ballistic missiles.

As with many visionary ideas, the SDI has stirred resistance. However, we are convinced that Americans One of the more puzzling aspects of the criticism is its "can't do" tone, as if the critics have forgotten how often U.S. science has surmounted seemingly impossible challenges.

The argument, much of it misinformed, has tended to obscure the SDI's basic purpose. It provides for the research to enable the president and Congress to decide whether to proceed with the deployment of a reliable defense against ballistic mis-siles. This research goal can and will be met without violating the treaty governing anti-ballistic missiles. During the 1970s some people held an illusionary belief that the Russians might accept what Henry A. Kissinger has called "the historically amazne theory that vulnerability contributed to peace, and invulnerability contributed to the risks of war." However, since the signing of the ABM treaty in 1972, the Soviet Union has spent roughly as much on all forms of strategic defense as it has on its huge offensive program. The Soviets have built more than a halfdozen major laser research and development facilities and test ranges. More than 10,000 Soviet scientists and engineers are associated with laser development alone.

In the aggregate, Soviet defensive activities suggest that the Soviet Union may be preparing to break out of the ABM treaty by establishing an ABM defense of its territory - even as it claims that our research program is destabilizing and must be stopped. In contrast, the United States, to date, has done only minimal research in the field since the ABM treaty was signed. We need to accelerate our research, and base it on these beliefs:

• Uncertainty enhances deterrence. An effective strategic defense would cause an enemy to think twice before risking nuclear aggression, be-cause it would increase enormously the uncertainty of achieving a successful disarming attack. An effective U.S. defense would not have to be leak-proof to create this uncertainty. Avoidance of technological surprise. It would serve as a hedge against being surprised by a Soviet breakthrough in advanced defense technologies. Such a breakthrough would seriously tilt the balance against us and put us at great risk.

• A prudent hedge against possible major Soviet defense deployment. In the near term our research program represents a wise investment against the possibility of a breakout of the ABM treaty by the Russians. With knowledge of the state of our research program, they might decide against deployment of advanced deBy Caspar W. Weinberger The writer is U.S. Secretary of Defense.

fenses. This is especially important offensive arms reductions. The deepbecause the Soviet Union already has er the arms reductions, the greater the violated the ABM treaty in ways that danger posed by Soviet non-compliimply an intention to expand its straance. Strategic defenses could reduce this danger. We cannot ignore the many Soviet violations of agreements that they have signed in the past.

accidental launching of a missile against the United States. • Offensive force reduction. If a reliable and cost-effective strategic defense technology should prove practical, both superpowers would have powerful incentives to reconsider the value of their offensive missile striking power. Strategic defenses, therefore could contribute to securing agreements for deep mutual re-ductions in offensive arms. Insurance against the Soviet Union's non-compliance with deep world. In the absence of an adequate defense it is unlikely that any American president would sign a comprehensive nuclear disarmament treaty, or that the U.S. Senate would ratify such a treaty. Nuclear disarmament is a distant goal, but one that we should not foreclose.

From the very outset we have stressed that strategic defense and arms reductions could and should work together, each making the other more effective. This administration shares with its allies the desire for meaningful nuclear-arms reductions, not pseudo arms-control agreements that codify enormous increases. We still hold this belief.

Arms reductions and strategic defenses could provide a basis for a new American relationship with the Soviet Union. Together, our governments share the common goal of avoiding nuclear war. The Russians already have cooperated with us in certain ways to reduce the risks of nuclear catastrophe. We have agreed to upgrade the hotline. We are in essential agreement on non-proliferation policy. We both exercise great caution about nuclear arms in many important ways. It should be possible to work with the Soviet Union to create an arrangement that offers more safe-ty to both our societies and to allies. The long-term aim of the Strategic Defense Initiative is to determine whether we can move from exclusive reliance on the threat of nuclear retaliation, toward greater reliance on, and deployment of defensive systems. Such systems would save lives. not threaten them. The plan involves a visionary, moral quest. Los Angeles Times

Moscow Wants to End Arms Race, Too

N EW YORK — Of the three goals of Mikhail S. Gorbachev's emerging foreign and security policy—stiffening the Soviet image abroad, harassing the United States and obtaining an arms control agreement— the third should be of the greatest importance to the West. I believe that the new Soviet leadership is deeply interested in avoiding a new major cycle of the unending arms race.

Mr. Gorbachev understands the uniqueness of the present moment in the international security situation, in which both superpowers are poised for new arms competition. We are at the point where the momentum of major technological advances threatens to take charge of nuclear strategies and long-range security policies. We are also reaching a stage in the development of new weapons, particularly space-based systems and cruise es, where the essential principle for arms control — verifiability of agreements reached — may become extremely difficult if not impossible.

Mr. Gorbachev's interest in reaching a comprehensive arms control agreement is dictated by the domestic economic and social consequences of an escalating arms race. The relative costs of a new cycle in the arms race will be much higher than in the 1970s. The burdens of sharply increased military expenditures will significantly affect Soviet plans for industrial modernization. They will make all but impossible an increase in Soviet living standards, a necessary ingredient for higher productivity.

The extremely sophisticated technology involved in America's proposed Strategic Defense Initiative will put the Soviet Union at a clear disadvantage and require heroic efforts for a continuous catch-up race. Does it seem likely or even possible that the United States will be inclined to turn away from the SDI if the may be behind it, the SDI will desta-

By Seweryn Bialer This is the third of three articles.

Soviet Union is pursuing an aggressive foreign policy elsewhere?

A Soviet effort to pursue both an arms control agreement and an aggressive foreign policy elsewhere is reminiscent of the Soviet policies of the 1970s that ended détente.

Mr. Gorbachev may believe that he in order to drive a successful bargain with the United States. That view may be a tragic misunderstanding of how the United States regards the Soviet Union. If Mr. Gorbachev succeeds only in arousing American dis-trust, will he be able to back away from an aggressive policy in order to pursue arms control?

Or will he then decide that moderating an aggressive policy signals a fatal weakness on his part? How he proceeds may depend in large measure on the progress made in Geneva. The Soviet Union will continue trying to achieve a deal that will be most advantageous to itself.

But such a deal does not have to be disadvantageous to America.

The United States has two choices for enhancing its security. The first is to press for mutual, drastic, verifiable and equitable reductions of offensive weapons. The second is to press on with unilateral plans for missile defense, the "star wars" program. The first choice is better-suited to achieve the key goals of arms control —to deny either power the capability to launch a first strike; to build stability into the Soviet-American strategic balance and to establish a new balance based on finite deterrence, that is, the minimum forces necessary bilize the military situation. Before rejecting the first choice, America should at least explore patiently the extent of concessions that Mr. Gorbachev would be willing to make to avoid a new arms race.

Of course the United States has to oppose the first and second goals of Mr. Gorbachev's foreign policy — for example, the hard line in Eastern Europe and exploitation of American vulnerabilities in the international arena. Yet the United States should keep an open mind with regard to Mr. Gorbachev's clear desire to prevent a new arms race spiral. To reach an agreement with the Soviets on the comprehensive reduction and equitable balance of offensive weapons is in the interests of both the United States and the Soviet Union, But it is uncertain if arms control can be unlinked from the general foreign policies of the two superpowers. Five months from now President Ronald Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev will meet in Geneva. This summit meeting may improve the atmosphere of Soviet-American relations and prevent their further deterioration. There are, however, very few items of the current international situation about which both sides can agree. The past decade has pointed up the basic irreconcilability of Soviet and American global interests. In this sitnation, the arms control negotiations have to carry almost the entire weight of improvement of Soviet-American relations and of the management of the conflict away from disastrous confrontations. We have to hope that at the November summit both sides will seriously and with an open mind explore ways to break the stalemate of the Geneva arms negotiations.

Optimism On Debt Is Premature

Central

And So

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — The conventional wisdom about Third World debt is that the crisis is over. and future problems are "manageable." But there are some warning signals that this may be too reassuring an appraisal. What John H. Makin of the American Enterprise Insutute calls a "remission" of the problem applies only to the "Big Four" Latin American debtors— namely Mexico. Venezuela, Brazil and, hopefully, Argentina.

In any event, to speak of a "global" Third World debt problem is misleading. The problems vary widely, Thus, the Philippines is on the verge of collapse, with a credit rating next to zero, and a $26-billion debt. Another disaster area is sub-Saha-ran Africa, which will not have the money to pay back $2 billion of loans from the International Monetary Fund in the next couple of years.

And in Latin America, once you get past the Big Four, it is altogether a different ball game. As a development aid expert. Christine A. Bog-danowicz-Bindert points out, smaller countries such as Bolivia, Peru and Nicaragua for all practical purposes have already defaulted on their debt; and others, such as Chile, Jamaica, and the Dominican Republic, are rife with political and social turmoil. As she goes on to say in a study for the Overseas Development Council, these problems have been ignored by U.S. commercial banks because they have bigger fish to fry, trying to protect their investments in the Big Four.

Meanwhile, the relatively better outlook in the Big Four is fragile. In part, the 1984 improvement can be traced to a sharp cut in their imports (at the behest of the IMF) and a strong American economy that sucked in their exports. That situa-tion is changing: U.S. economic ex-pansion has slowed, and Third World exports are again slipping.

Another straw in the wind is the unchallenged fact that the "success" stories, like Mexico, have been built on their ability to reduce balance-ofpayments debts. But they have been notoriously deficient in improving their domestic economies. Necessary economic growth has been halted Mexico will have added troubles as a result of sliding world oil prices.

The IMF's managing director, Jacques de Larosière, likes to point out that overall, the aggregate balance-of-payments deficits of Third World prices have been church from countries have been shaved from $110 billion a year in the early 1980s to less than $40 billion last year.

That shows, he says, how successful the "adjustment programs" — a cuphemism for belt-tightening and fiscal reform required by the IMF have been. There is no doubt that this is a spectacular result, but it has been achieved mostly at the expense of the local standard of living. The Bank for International Settlements in Basel, Switzerland, noted in its recent annudomestic inflation under control, and to restore domestic interest rates to levels that are positive in real terms."

That will take some considerable skill by everyone involved in rescheduling the buildup of maturing loans in the next five years. It will also take a major reversal of the protectionist trend in industrial nations that blocks poor countries' exports.

Henry A. Kissinger has suggested an ambitious plan for a new Development Institution that would borrow money in world capital markets for relending to Latin American countries at low rates. The international financial establishment is always dubious about new ideas, but a re-examination of the many debt problems is clearly in the United States' self-interest. Roger A. Sedjo of Resources for the Future, a nonprofit research group, has pointed out that to stave off major defaults the United States will have to let debtor countries run trade surpluses indefinitely. That is the only way they can service their debt. But continuing Third World surpluses require a steady run of U.S. trade deficits. Meanwhile, what should be done about the IMF austerity demands, especially insistence on basic reforms in a very short time span? The charge that the IMF is recklessly austere angers Mr. de Larosière. His response is that the real trouble is not the loan conditions, but the economic excesses which got many of these countries into trouble.

But hostility in the Third World to the IMF is a fact of life, and it will have to be dealt with. An internationally respected central banker thinks that the IMF could show more flexibility, and get away from a fixed formula to be applied to every coun-try: "Because they are an international institution, the pressure in their executive board is that what's good for country A is good for country B.
The IMF has a little cookie cutter that they apply to every country — O.K., you've got to devalue, you've got to restrain the money supply, you've got to reduce the deficit, and so on. They go by the book."

In "Gromyko and His Memories Still Haunt the Kremlin" (July 8). James Reston writes that there is "some evidence ... that Mr. Gorba-chev and Mr. Reagan may want to begin concentrating on the future, rather than listening to some of their advisers..." It may be worthwhile to remember that in his dealings with Joseph Stalin, Franklin D. Roosevelt preferred to follow his "hunches" than to listen to the most experienced advice. ## Did Television Hold the World Hostage in Beirut?

By Tom Wicker

N EW YORK — Back in the 1950s, someone coined the term "pseudo event" to describe happenings contrived solely to appear on television. Pseudo events, in this usage, would not have happened had there been no cameras available to film them. But 30 years later, it is the other way around: Events outside our private lives lack a certain reality and become pseudo events if they do not appear on television.
In the United States, television has become the national nervous system — and satellites are making it an international nervous system. What most Americans knew of last year's presidential campaign was what they saw on television; and how much reality would famine in Ethiopia have in Middletown, Connecticut, if not televised. The ubiquity of television and the consequent dependence of viewers has been lost sight of in the current clamor over the role of television in the Beirut hostage crisis. So has the distinction between television and television journalism. The latter, like print journalism, has plenty to answer for, owing mostly to it being an intensely competitive business, perpetrated by fallible hu-man beings for a demanding audience.

In the latest hostage crisis, for example, the overabundance of filmed interviews with griev-ing hostage families and the mindless repetition of that awful television inquiry, "How does it feel?" (to be a hostage, to be freed, to be threatened, not to be threatened, ad infinitum) exemplitied unintelligent journalism. On the other hand, the audience does not necessarily know what restraints journalism, television or print, may be imposing on itself:

Lou Cannon of The Washington Post has pointed out that the press did not report that one hostage was a member of the National Security Agency, which would have endangered him, or that — as some reporters were privately informed - the Reagan administration did not expect to succeed in its demand for the release of seven hostages taken before the hijacking of Flight 847 from Athens airport.

The most serious charge is not really against television journalism, but against television itself. Some commentators and officials say that television should have been barred from the Beirut airport and other important locales, that the hostages were only taken so that their captors could parade their cause in American living rooms, and that television aided that cause and sion, not just American but that of other coun-tries, would hardly be practical; and anyway, that is frustration speaking and in search of something, or someone, to biame. Those Amal spokesmen may have emoved their television exposure and taken advantage of it; but that was only one aspect of this nonpseudo event aimed at freeing prisoners in Israel. Would the two fanatics who hijacked the TWA plane have left it alone had they thought there would be no television coverage? Unlikely. Would the Flight 874 hostages have been released sooner had the cameras been absent? It is manding worldwide attention, kept their captors talking and prevented more of the hostages from meeting the terrible fate of Robert Steth Was television "used" by Amai? Of course, just as it is used all the time by the Reagan administration for its own purposes. Did Shiite more likely that the presence of television, com-

propaganda threaten U.S. security? The question insults the intelligence of Americans. But the real reason that television (not always television journalism) was properly present in Beirut, even at those bizarre "news conferences," is just that television exists; it has become a condition of being. It may on occasion be inconvenient, intrusive, even harmful. But if because of government censorship or network self-cen-sorship the hostage crisis had not been visible. real, on American screens, the outrage and outcry would have been a thousand times louder than what is now being heard, and rightly so. For we depend on television for perception as we depend on air for breath. And that is the way it is.

Among the experts looking into the postpolio syndrome, there is disagreement about diagnosis, treatment and prognosis. Some believe the late effects of polio can be minimized or even reversed by decreasing activity, using devices such as braces or wheelchairs, or following special exercise programs. In more severe cases, there is atrophy of damaged but useful muscles, and even of muscles previously unaffected; it is known as "progressive postpolio muscular atrophy."
Many of those who believed they were finished with polio are sudor wheelchairs. Others, long weaned from iron lungs, need mechanical breathing devices at night.

WHILE it remains unclear how widespread the late effects of polio are, a recent epidemiological study by researchers at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, estimated that, of all survivors of paralytic polio in that city, 25 percent were experiencing one or more of the symptoms of postpolio syndrome. FEWER than 2 percent of those infected with polio develop the severe form that causes paralysis. Though the virus invades motor neurons or nerve cells in the anterior horn — the front part of the spinal cord that controls motor functions — not all nerve cells are destroyed. Experts theorize that the remaining anterior-horn cells, therefore, overwork to maintain movement in an affected muscle. When anterior-horn cells die. neighboring healthy motor neurons take over by sprouting extra nerve fibers. Some researchers suspect that when nerve cells become responsible for a greater than normal percentage of muscle function, the ncreased metabolic demands may cause these extra fibers to fail after several decades. The strain creates blocked nerve impulses at the junction of nerve and muscle, resulting in the weakness of postpolio pa-

There is no specific treatment for postpolio syndrome. Each case is different. Perhaps one of the most controversial issues is the role of exercise. Most doctors recommend avoiding exercise that causes exhaustion. Others encourage conditioning exercises.

Physicians at Rancho Los Amigos believe the key to treatment is in finding ways to decrease strain, including streamous exercise, and avoiding chronic fatigue. With rest and adequate support of weakened muscles, the dictum is: "Do any-thing that doesn't hurt."

On the other hand, Dr. Richard Owen, medical director of the Sister Kenny Institute in Minneapolis, believes the fatigue and weakness can often be traced to an increasingly sedentary life. In 1982, Dr. Owen opened a postpolio clinic at the institute and put more than 200 patients on cardiopulmonary conditioning programs. Swimming, stretching and pool aerobics are prescribed for 20 minutes, three times a week.
"What's subsided most in these

Progress Against Parkinson's Disease

ATLANTA (WP) - Scientists at Emory University have succeeded for the first time in reversing Parkinson's disease symptoms in higher animals by implanting cells from monkey fetuses into the brains of afflicted

"We're not calling the transplant procedure a cure," cautioned Dr. Frederick A. King, director of Emory's Yerkes Regional Primate Research Center. Even if future studies prove successful, it would be years before such a procedure could be contemplated for human Parkinson's victims. Implants previously have reversed the onslaught of Parkinson's

The cause of the progressive disease, which produces tremors, stiffness and slowness of movement, is unknown, but the level of a key brain chemical called dopamine is sharply reduced in Parkinson's victims. An Emory neurosurgeon, Roy A. E. Bakay, took dopamine-producing cells from 35- and 37-day-old rhesus monkey fetuses and implanted them in the brains of adult monkeys in which a condition mimicking Parkinson's disease had been induced.

Pathologic Laughing, Weeping Eased

BOSTON (NYT) — Researchers from the University of Rochester
(New York) Medical Center, using low doses of the anti-depressant drug amitriptyline, report some success in controlling what is called pathologic laughing and weeping, an uncontrollable side effect of multiple sclerosis, strokes, brain injury and some other diseases.

Of 12 patients in the study, eight showed improvement in 48 hours and seven of them had "dramatic" improvement, according to researchers from the university's departments of psychology and neurology and the Center for Brain Research.

Each of the four patients with uncontrolled laughing responded to the amitriptyline, while four of the eight who wept uncontrollably did not, the researchers, led by Dr. Randolph B. Schiffler, reported in the New England Journal of Medicine.

STEPHENVILLE, Texas (AP) - The 100 million-year-old remains of dinosaur-like creatures, including fossils of an age from which few remains have been found, have been uncovered on a prehistoric flood plain by students and geologists from Tarleton State University and Southern Methodist University.

The team, mostly students, uncovered six dinosaur skeletons. The geologists said substantial remains might still be buried. "This finding fills in a major gap in the record and gives us a more complete picture of the workings of these animals in their environment, said Louis Jacobs of the Shuler Museum of Paleontology at SMU.

Test for Vitamin Lack Is Developed

BOSTON (AP) - A test can reveal an inherited vitamin deliciency in newborns that may cause mental retardation if not treated quickly, doctors from at the Medical College of Virginia report in the New England Journal of Medicine. Victims of the disease do not produce an enzyme that allows their bodies to recycle the vitamin biotin. The resulting symptoms are so subtle that they sometimes are not noticed until permanent brain damage has

The Virginia doctors who developed the test, led by Dr. Barry Wolf, said the condition may strike one in every 40,000 babies. The biotinase deficiency test can be performed inexpensively and with the same blood sample taken to check newborns for other diseases, the doctors said.

Because gallstones are twice as prevalent among women as men and the condition usually strikes in middle age, the study was confined to middle

The Rewards of Keeping Stocks for the Long Haul

By EDWARD ROHRBACH

ARIS—Stocks, up 10 percent or 123 points on the Dowaverage since January, have been rewarding to the faithful in 1985. In fact, it has been a profitable 12 months for investors who have remained true believers. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index is up 30 percent from last July's lows. And no one has kept the faith toward Wall Street more religiously than Market Logic, an advisory letter published in Fort Lauderdale, Florida.

Three years ago this month, just before the buil market took off, it recommended a fully invested position in stocks. It has not wavered since, despite the ordeals of fire -corrections and group rotations — that have burned many "in-and-out" traders during an 80-percent climb by the S&P-500.

In 1984, such devotion burt, as Market Logic's recom-mended portfolio dropped 13.7 percent, according to the Hulbert Financial Digest, which tracks all the major market letters. Through 1985's first six months, Market Logic was up 19 percent, ranking it 37th among the 140 letters moni-tored. Mark Hulbert, editor, called it "very consistent and one of the very top performers cumulatively over the last five years."

Since first published 10 years ago, the market letter has never been bearish toward Wall Street, although it has advocated a partial refuge in Treasury bills several times. While the S&P-500 has doubled in the decade, Market Logic's list of recommended stocks still in its portfolio — 17 of the 37 have been there at least 5. years — has risen 513 percent. That is an average rate of 43 percent based on the length of time each position has been held.

OUR of the recommended stocks have gone down, but what has pushed Market Logic's performance into the heavens have been stocks like American Express and Humana. The latter has soared from 58 cents a share (adjusted for splits) when recommended in 1975 to well over $30

Market Logic recommended Shearson Loeb Rhoades in April 1978 at $6.25, which surged to well over $100 before merging into American Express. That stock was retained in the portfolio and doubled again. Adjusted for splits, the combined Shearson/American Express holding has appreciated from a little over $1 a share to more than $45. Other big winners have been Collins Foods, up 16 times, and Western Pacific Industries.

"We feel a buy-and-hold approach is more appropriate for the average investor than a rapid turnover of stocks," said Glen King Parker, co-editor of Market Logic with Norman G. Fosback. He added that he doubts many people who trade frequently on Wall Street actually make money consistently, partly because he thinks they often ignore the higher taxes on short-term profit-taking and underestimate the cost of brokerage fees.

The market letter has made no new recommendations so far in 1985 and rarely suggests sale of stocks in the portfolio. "We're pretty patient to see if they work out," commented Mr. Parker. Stocks in the master portfolio that are rated buys' for those with new money to invest are Automatix, Inter-Regional Financial, LSI Logic, TGI Friday's, Volt Information, Syntrex and Technalysis. Noting that the New York Stock Exchange has been hitting record highs lately, the current issue of Market Logic points out: Those records were achieved despite a background of international tension and uncertainty over the direction of the domestic economy -- a classic example of a bull market 'climbing a wall of

While Market Logic's forecasting models, which combine an array of fundamental, monetary, sentiment and technical indicators, point toward a "second half of 1985 that will be just as good as the first half, two developments could kill the upmove." Cited are a tightening of monetary policy by the Federal Reserve and a speculative blow-off. But the former is "unlikely, to say the least,

Britain Challenges A U.S. Tax

Retaliatory Bill Passes Commons

The Associated Press LONDON - The House of Commons adopted on Tuesday night a measure that could cost U.S. companies in Britain £500 million ($930 million) a year in lost tax rebates in retaliation for the unitary tax that 12 American states impose on corporate profits.

Under the unitary tax system states tax the worldwide profits of companies operating within their jurisdiction rather than the profits derived only from local operations. The tax is controversial even in the United States, but supporters say it prevents companies from hiding profits in lower-taxing countries or

The 12 states that have adopted the tax are Alaska, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Massachusetts, Montana, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon

The reserve powers, which were approved without dissent, are con-tained in a rider to the Finance Bill that empowers the government to deprive U.S. companies with subsidiaries in Britain of tax credits on dividends. According to the Treasury financial secretary, John Moore, the measure, "at the extreme, could cost these companies as much as £500 million a year."

Under current law, the subsidiaries may repatriate dividends to the U.S. parent on a tax-free basis. The Finance Bill is expected to be sed into law this week.

Mr. Moore said the reserve pow ers were justified because the uni-tary tax violated accepted practices of international trade.

"It is objectionable that a state tax authority should demand information about the financial records of United Kingdom companies and their subsidiaries, which are out-side the United States and unrelated to activities within the United States " he said

But he told the Commons that he hoped it would not be necessary to use the powers and that he hoped the states would act on their own to screp the controversial tax.

He said the government would not recommend to Parliament that the powers be invoked without consulting those concerned.

He added: "It is important that if it becomes necessary to invoke a degree of ilexibility in specifying the companies and states that will be affected."

Its reserves by $20 billion a year to finance development plans deemed mani, the Saudi Arabian oil minister, made the threat to several savetiments.

AT&T's Call to Arms Has Become Global

By Eric N. Berg New York Times Service

NEW YORK - "Save on calls down under." says GTE Sprint, in advertisements promoting recently inaugurated long distance phone service to Australia. An MCI ad showing a family of penguins in the Antarctic says, "This is the only continent you can't call right now with MCI International." An AT&T television ad filmed in Italy shows a doleful U.S. teenager bidding farewell to her Italian boyfriend. A voice in the background offers a cheerful note: "Saying goodbye is never easy, but saying hello is, with AT&T."

So goes the marketing in the latest push in telecom-munications competition in the United States: inter-national long distance. Having broken American Tele-phone & Telegraph Co.'s monopoly on domestic phone & I elegraph Co.'s monopoly on domestic interactly calling, its cut-rate rivals are trying to repeat their success in the business of calling abroad. While AT&T still controls about 97 percent of that $5-billion market, most industry analysts say the percentage could shrink quickly as these rivals intensify their efforts in a rapidly developing marketing war.

"The U.S. business customer is used to thinking about competitive carriers," said Mary A. Johnston, a long-distance industry analyst at the Yankee Group, a Boston-based research firm. "If they can get reasonable quality service for calls abroad, there is no reason they should not go for the low-priced carrier." Until now, most of the competition to AT&T has been in carrying calls from the United States to less-called countries, such as Oman, Bangladesh, Australia and Tanzania. While that represents a break from the past - for decades AT&T was the sole provider of phone service to those countries — telecommunica-tions professionals say the real challenge is to crack the phone giant's virtual monopoly on calls from the United States to Western Europe, Mexico and other beavily trafficked areas.

So far these rivals have been unable to gain access to most of those areas — the one important exception is Britain - and industry executives concede they will not show respectable profits until they do.

"As of yet we don't provide service to the areas where the real money is," said Seth D. Bhumenfeld, president and chief operating officer of MCI

Breaking into Europe is "proving to be a much harder sale," said Howard A. Neckowitz, director of Sprint International.

As in the domestic market, Sprint and MCI have emerged in international calling as the principal rivals to AT&T. But the competition is quickly increasing Later this summer, TRT Communications Inc., a small but fast-growing Washington company, will begin offering international service to customers of Starnet, the long-distance arm of Ford Motor Co. ## Via The Associated Press N.Y. Stock Prices Turn Upward

Major Restructuring Set By Diamond Shamrock

DALLAS — Diamond Sham-rock Corp., the Dallas-based doofficials say, will improve the com-DERTY'S CARTITIES.

William H. Bricker, chairman and chief executive officer, made the announcement at a meeting with stock analysts in New York.

The company said in a statement released in Dallas that it will increase its dividend, repurchase up to $200 million of its stock and create a master limited partnership, in which it will sell 12 percent of that new company.

It also said it will write down assets valued at $810 million in the second quarter of 1985, with the bulk of that reflected in a charge of $600 million on the company's Indonesian oil and gas properties.

The company said its offshore oil and gas operations in the Gulf of Mexico will be placed in Diamond Shamrock Of shore Partners Ltd. a master limited partnership with about 12 percent of the partnership units offered in an underwritten public offering expected to be com-pleted about Sept. 1.

Proceeds from the offering will be invested in the partnership's exploration and development programs, the company said.

Diamond Shamrock said it is adjusting its annual dividend of $1.76 to one that, the company said, is of greater value but will result in less cash for the shareholders. Beginning with the dividend scheduled for payment on Dec. 9,

> Diamond Sharmock said all of its businesses have been facing "an environment of severe competition and disinflation. These pressures, especially falling energy prices, have reduced the market value of many of our assets."

The reduction in shares means an increase in divi-dends and increases the value of stock to the shareholders, according to the prepared statement.

The company spokeswoman, Ginger Shearburn, said the restructuring action was "just showing our long-term commitment to improving shareholders' value."

Last month the company's com-mon stock fell to a 10-year low after several investment analysts predicted the company's dividend could be in jeopardy following a company report that had a poor earnings outlook.

Diamond Shamrock had earnings last year of $242 million on sales of $4.5 billion.

Renault Aides Say Losses 'Stable' in First 6 Months

By Axel Krause uemational Revald Tribune

PARIS - Losses of Renault. France's state-owned automaker, "stabilized" during the first six months of this year primarily be-cause of layoffs and other costcutting measures, company execu-tives said Wednesday.

This means that Renault's losses are neither increasing nor decreasing from 1984 levels, the executives year, Renault reported a loss of 3.6 billion francs (about $400 million at current exchange rates), but that widened to 12.5 billion francs for the entire year from 1.57 billion francs in 1983. It was the largest net loss ever for a French company.

Georges Besse, Renault's charman, is siming to have the anti-maker break even during 1987 and to begin earning profits in the fol-lowing years, the executives said. However, speaking on the condi-plans to lay off 21,000 people by the end of 1986, reducing its work force in France to 77,000 from 98,000 at the end of 1984. The excentives said they were both surprised and relieved by the apparent acceptance of the plan by workers, ever though it has been severely criticized by the Communist-led General Confederation of Labor, one of several unions represented at Renault, and the French Communist Party.

Leaders of the General Confett eration of Labor also recently challenged Renault's plans to provide financial help to its ailing American Motors Corp. affiliate in the

The interest in the international market is for a variety of reasons. Although billings are only a frac-tion of the $50 billion that households and businesses will spend on domestic long-distance calls this year, the increasing globalization of commerce and declining transmission costs led to foreign traffic growing more than twice as fast as domestic last year - 20 percent compared with 9 percent.

Supply Corp. Arranges Line of Credit

New York Times Service NEW YORK — American Hospital Supply Corp., fighting an unwanted takeover proposal from Baxter Travenol Laboratories Inc, has signed a new $3-billion line of credit, according to Wall Street

The financing, the sources said Tuesday, opens up a wide variety of options for American Hospital Supply, including the possible repurchase of substantial amounts of its own stock or a retaliatory bid for Baxter. American Hospital Supply officials did not return phone calls regarding the credit line.

American Hospital Supply's board rejected Baxter's $3.7-billion merger offer last month, preferring to go with plans to combine with the Hospital Corp. of America, the largest U.S. hospital management chain. The board will meet again Friday to review the matter.

A NCIENT Maya ceramic figures from the Aisland of Jaina are sometimes hollow, and many of them contain pebbles. Once while I was examining the effigy of a ninth-century priest or nobleman wearing an elaborate head-dress and a fancy necklace, I gave it a shake to hear the pebbles rattle, and from one of two grad heles in the back a pebble deconed into small holes in the back a pebble dropped into my palm. I looked at it with surprise. Nobody else had seen it for more than a thousand years.

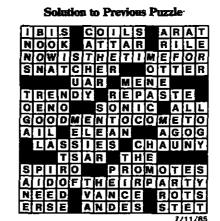

The importance of the Jaina pebble did not depend on the fact that it had lain a long time concealed from human sight; it mattered be-cause I knew that a Mayan craftsman had scooped it up, or perhaps deliberately selected it, to place inside the statue. His fingers must have touched what dropped so unexpectedly into my palm.

If one of Earth's lowliest objects — a pebble — can be imbued with significance through such a tenuous association, the first glimpse of a prehistoric sovereign's funerary artifacts must be electrifying.

Alberto Ruz, a Cuban-born scholar who directed much of the excavation at Palenque, Mexico, described the opening of Lord Pacal's tomb. A hidden staircase had been revealed, leading from the floor of the Temple of In-scriptions down into the unsuspected depths of a terraced pyramid on which the temple stood. Four years were required to clean out the debris that clogged the passage, but at last Ruz was able to squeeze through into a vault. He carried a floodlight, and what he saw evidently shocked him so that he could not speak. Later he wrote: "Out of the dim shadows emerged a vision from a fairytale, a fantastic, ethereal sight from another world... Across the walls marched succo figures in low relief. Then my eyes sought the floor. This was almost entirely filled with a great carved stone slab."

Scholars and laymen are equally obsessed by these long-gone lords of the jungle; every year more tourists visit Mexico and Central America to see the lichen-mottled ruins of Palenque, Uxmal, Labna, Chichen Itza, Tikal and other

Mayan cities. Sixteenth-century Spaniards were just as fascinated. Conquistadores searching for El Dorado met chieftains and priests wearing jaguar-skin shirts and hammered gold jewelry; but instead of a fabulous Gilded Man they found cities with paved roads, busy markets and palaces. The Mayan edifice collapsed with mysterious speed. European avarice and religious in-tolerance weakened it, but we still have trouble understanding the rapid disintegration. In 1549 the infamous Franciscan Diego de Landa managed to burn almost every Mayan codes. Philologists are still trying to learn what might have been obvious were it not for this pious vandal. The deterioration and calculated demolition of buildings, frescoes and sculpture were a fearful loss, but Landa's auto-da-fe seems worse. This zealot burned the record of a civilization.

Charles Gallenkamp notes in "Maya" that with the passing of their kings and native priests, the people soon forget whatever they had known about astronomy, calendries, mathematics and hieroglyphic writing. "Worst of all, the obliteration of their civilization was so thorough, and so swiftly were alien values and concents substituted in its place, that there was no hope that future generations could ever resurrect it." The "Popol Vuh" (Council Paper, or Common Book) was written during the Spanish conquest and thus does not belong to the classic age, which is loosely dated A. D. 600-900. Landa never got his hands on the "Popol Vuh," and no European knew of it until a less bigoted friar, Francisco Ximenez, made acopy. Dennis Tedlock has produced the first nabridged translation into English.

The book opens in darkness with a world inhabited by gods, Tedlock comments, and the most remarkable thing about it is "the vast temporal sweep of its narrative."

It describes humanity's beginning, naming the first four people to be made and modeled: Jaguar Quitze, Jaguar Night, Mahucutah and True Jaguar. We are told that they were good and handsome. Whatever they saw, they understood. "Their sight passed through trees, through rocks, through lakes, through seas, through mountains, through plains." Then their wives were created: Celebrated Seahouse, Prawn House, Hummingbird House and Macaw House. "And this is our root, we who are the Quiche people."

The end of the Quiche has been deduced from the rubble of Mayapan, perhaps the last great city. Although we do not know just what happened, we do know enough to recognize a familiar scenario: disunity, political intrigue, moral corruption, the schemes of egocentric authorities. Mayapan only superficially resem-bled the majestic centers of the past.

Evan Connell is the author, most recently, of "Son of the Morning Star." He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

ON the diagramed deal, South opened one no-trump, showing 15 to 17 points, and reached four hearts after a Stayman anction. West led the diamond king and shifted to the spade deuce. South won and drove out the heart ace, after which he knew that the club queen was on his right. How did know?

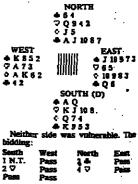

Notice that the spade shift did not give South a trick, since he would never have to take a spade finesse. The diamond queen would furnish a discard for the losing spade in the dummy, so the club queen was the only problem.

The declarer did some effective point counting. He could see 23 points, and West was played East for the club queen known to have begun with Aand presumably, the king of spades. (The spade deuce strongly suggested and honor, so East's nine could hardly be from K-J-10-9.) That totaled 37 out of the possible 40.

If West held the club queen, he would do some similar arithmetic and would know that his partner held at most one jack. In that case West would not have shifted to a spade because he would know that South held the A-Q.

He might have done equally

Bradley bulled into Martinez, bowling him over and severely wrenching his ankle, but Martinez held onto the ball for the out.

Sitting dazed at the plate, Martinez spotted Thomas trying to take third, but Martinez threw the ball wildly into foul territory down the third-base line. Now on his back, Martinez caught the return throw from left fielder Bell just as Thomas reached the plate, and retired him without moving his glove. Thomas, realizing that Martinez was badly injured, did not slide into the plate. into the plate.

Hugo Pratt, King of the Bande Dessinée

By Mark Hunter

T AUSANNE, Switzerland - From an arid desert controlled by roving marauders, a red-haired Pole wearing the uniform of the Royal Air Force approaches a fort in south-ern Ethiopia. Inside he finds a platoon of restive Moslem troops under the command of an Italian officer whose moments of lucidity are heavily outweighed by a lunatic infatua-

Given these few details, a fan of the Enropean comic-book novel form known as the bande dessinée could probably identify an adventure by Hugo Pratt (in this case, "Un Fortin en Dankali").

Since the death in 1983 of Herge, the Belgian artist who created Tintin, Pratt, 58, has been recognized as the standard for bande dessinée adventure writers. His best-known creation is Corto Maltese, the pirate son of a drunken sailor and a Gypsy prostitute, whose seven book-length albums have sold more than one million copies in five languages. The second issue of Corto, a French magazine based on Pratt's hero, is just out, and is expected to sell 50,000 copies, according to Joelle Faure, a spokeswoman for Casterman, Pratt's publisher. Pratt has won virtually every award in his field, including the special jury prize at the 10th international Salon of Bande Dessinée at Angoulême, France, in

The award that pleased me the most." Pratt said at his villa overlooking Lake Geneva, "was from the National Cartoonists Association in 1975 — because that prize goes to the artists I admired when I was starting out.

I was among the masters."

For Pratt, that was a lifelong dream. "I was educated by the bande destinee," he said. In particular, he was influenced by Harold Foster's "Prince Valiant" and Milton Caniff's "Terry and the Pirates." During his child-hood in Venice, "the bande destinee was improved the process of the content of the prince of the content of the prince of the content of portant for our generation, because of fascism, which blocked cultural expression. Without understanding it, the reader took account of a certain liberty in the bande dessinee. When the fascists stopped allowing American bandes dessinees in '39, it was a closing of the imagination." He added, "Fascism is a negative adventure."

At 13, Pratt he was taken to Ethiopia by his father, a free-lance English soldier, and enrolled in an Italian youth battalion, where he witnessed scenes that would later surface in his stories: A military doctor committing suicide by exploding grenades in his pockets, an African mercenary cutting the throat of a French Somali trooper as the latter begged for solidarity against the whites. In 1943 Pratt was seized by South African troops and interned before returning to Italy to finish the war with the U.S. Fifth Army. The South Africans, noted Pratt, brought American comics back into his life. "Even in this terrible crime that is war, I found something that was important for me later," he said.

Pratt spent the next 35 years as a traveler Geneva for two years, then 10 in Argentina, two in London, a year in West Virginia, and sojourns in Paris and Venice — before settling in Lausanne three years ago. Throughout, he worked in the bande dessinée (starting with "Jungle Man" and "Indian River" in 1946).

"London was most important for me," he said. "There I discovered the Anglo-Saxon adventure novel — Stevenson, Conrad, Melville, Jack London. I like them all, but before them, I was enchanted by Zane Grey — not a sophisticated writer, but he's effective."

At the same time, Pratt refined a drawing style "that is practically cinema," he said. "I made deluxe storyboards. For me it's important to have a simple design, to make the story move.

Corto Maltese first appeared in the chil-dren's magazine Pif in 1967, at a time when the bande dessinée was just beginning to reach for an adult audience. The second Corto album, "La Ballade de la Mer Salée" (The Ballad of the Salt Sea, Casterman, 1975) was a breakthrough, a best-seller "that gave the European bande dessinée the chance to be considered a different medium, for adult aders." Pratt said.

The story is classic Pratt. Corto finds himself caught between the British and German navies and free-lance pirates in the South Pacific at the outbreak of World War L Instead of trying to control the situation, he stands aside and allows his enemies to destroy themselves - always brooding, brave, contemptuous of anthority, true to his values. Pratt abjures psychological explanations of Corto's character; Corto is revealed by what he does and does not do.

"Corto is mysterious to me, too," said Pratt. "He lives for himself." He added, halfjoking: "Sometimes I expect to see Hugo Pratt as a bande dessinée by Corto Maltese. Perhaps we're projections of his." The academicians who to date have written 96 theses on Creator Hugo Pratt.

Corto, by Pratt's count, might be disappoint-

Pratt does not appear overly impressed by his success. "I live well, but it always happens too late," he said. He added: "For me, the bande dessinée is good artisanship. Art is another thing." But he takes good artisanship seriously. His library is stocked with volumes on Africa, the American colonies, the Amazon basin, all settings for his stories.

He is a fierce defender of the bande des-sinée, especially against what he calls "the guard dogs of official culture."

"It's unfortunate that the bande dessinée isu't taken seriously," he said. "This attitude comes from a very hostile ignorance, of certain people protecting their little spaces.
"I don't like the wise men, the controllers," he said. "I have a costain exhibit I man to he he said. "I have a certain ethic: I want to be able to do and say and read what I please — and pay the consequences." Corto Maltese couldn't have said it better.
